COTTON MARKETS. New York, July 15.—Reports of continued dry weather and higher temperature in the Southwest was the cause of an early advance in to-day's cotton market, but prices later vices from the Southwest indicating the vices from the Southwest of the season were accompanied by moderate buying orders, while there was also considerable support from Eastern be't sources and from Liverpool. Offerings increased just about 12% cents for December, however, and there seemed quite a general disposition to take profits following the official forecast for lower temperatures in Oklahoma. Prices began to drag off in consequence, and when it was seen that the detailed weather report for the Houston district confirming early weather advices was failing to inspire any fresh demand of consequence afferings because more general. Weakness in the stock market may have been partly responsible for heavy Wall Street selling, while the good weather reported cast of the river, with rains in sections of Mississippi and Temessee, which have recently complained of drought combined with some private perietions for rain within the next day or two in South Texas doubtiess added to the aggressiveness of local selling. Some of the scattered buying on the decline was attributed to trade interest.
